

From her obit, she died in Tonopah where she had made her home since 1930 and operated an establishment in the restricted district throughout that time; with the exception of during WWI when she ran only the bar by Army orders and the past two years when the license was revoked.